

Claim French Used Poison Gas First

Use Of Grenades Cited in German Official History

Under the auspices of the Reichsarchiv (State Archives), the eighth volume of the German Official History of the World War has just been published. It deals with events of 1915, particularly the campaign in Russia, operations against Italy and the French offensive in Artois. On all these fronts the German arms were successful.

It was in 1915 (April 22) that poison gas was used tactically on the battle field for the first time—by the Germans at Ypres. The Official History discusses this event at some length, indicating moreover that the chemical warfare will be dealt with exhaustively in the ninth volume, to appear next year.

The German history seems to show that the first use of gas came from the French. It says that prior to the war French armaments included gas-granades intended for use in siege operations; that early in 1915 the French G. H. Q. asked that such grenades should be issued to troops in the front line; that the war department in February circulated printed instructions for the use of gas grenades and that the engines were actually employed by some French troops at the end of that month. An supporting evidence, mention is made in the Official History of a field report of the Twenty-third Infantry (Reserve), and "other reports" not specified.

On the other hand, the Official History admits that at the end of 1914 the German artillery was supplied with gas shells (designated as type 7), use of which was made on the Russian front early in 1915, "with inconclusive results because of the great cold."

The Official History is careful to point out that the "T" shell "respected" the letter of the international conventions of The Hague, prohibiting the use of gas. The conventions forbade projectiles the sole purpose of which was to spread gas, whereas the "T" shell was both explosive and chemical. In the same way at Ypres the poison gas was not compressed into shells to be fired from cannon, as forbidden by the conventions, but contained in metal cylinders carried to the front lines and there released.

Speed Up Traffic

Escalators in Lupton Subway, England, Travel 120 Feet a Minute

Moving stairways or escalators, twice as fast as those used in the United States, have been installed in the London subway to speed up traffic to and from the trains. The machines travel 120 feet per minute and are capable of carrying 16,000 persons an hour on inclines of from twenty-four to thirty feet, another new record for escalators, says Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Increased speed is claimed by the London subway operators to be a rush-hour traffic can be handled much more quickly than was possible under the old stair-climbing method.

The Russian Language

There is a strong movement in Russia toward the use of the English language. And we do not wonder when we learn that there are publications in sixty-eight languages in the Soviet Union, which would make our language desirable. More than 100 languages and dialects are being used among the 160,000,000 Russian inhabitants. Of these, only 30,000,000 speak Russian.—Los Angeles Times.

Where People Live Leisurely

Village Of Old Stoke Pines Has Quiet Charm

One of the gems of England unspoiled by the hand of today, is the quiet village of Stoke Pines. A short bus ride from London, it yet remains a part of a world that is gone.

Tourists, as a rule, visit Stoke Pines churchyard, where Grey wrote his immortal "Elegy." There his tomb is built by the church wall where the ancient yew casts its shadow. It is a haven of rest, turning the weary one to leave his burdens outside the carved oak yew-gates. But that is not Stoke Pines itself.

Further on the road, up over a long hill, lies the village. Thatched houses, almost hidden in gardens, the riotous colors of which make the artist hand chase for canvas and palette, border the main road. At the top of the next hill is a crossroad which winds from the post office to the edge of the village where, in a grey cottage with a whitewashed door, stands the arm of the law makes his abode. Yet, even in Eden there is a policeman, although he finds little to do in the village but occasionally is summoned to restore order in the countryside round about.

But those garden-bliss of delphinium, red of rose and white of lilacs gleam patriotically along their paths. Here and there a venturesome plant has put forth its blooms on the overhanging eaves. Little downy bees ever thus take their place in the overhanging mass of shades. And over all is the peace of a life which is untroubled save in Greater Greater with a neighbor or to stroll to the post office to await the arrival of the afternoon bus.

Poetry Often Misquoted

One Line In Grey's "Elegy" Has Three Versions

Quotations from the classic poets are made every day by ordinary writers and speakers, yet the quotations of the same lines often differ. One of the most quoted poems is Grey's "Elegy in a Country Churchyard," and it is in a series of misquoting that the line in question has at least one line has three versions.

The Oxford Book of English Verse has in its edition published in 1901: "The lowing herd wind slowly o'er the lea."

"The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the lea."

"The lowing herd wind slowly o'er the lea."

The original of Grey's famous poem is surely in existence and it ought not to be difficult to establish which is the correct version. As the Oxford Book of English Verse was edited by such a competent literary man as Arthur Quiller-Couch, "the lowing herd wind slowly o'er the lea" is probably the right one.

Numerous instances of misquoting might be given. Perhaps the most misquoted is the line in Cervantes' poem which says: "Music hath charms to soothe a savage breast."

"Music hath charms to soothe a savage breast."

"Music hath charms to soothe a savage breast."

Echo Of The Conference

British Delegates' Views Of Britain Heard At Ottawa

A number of the United Kingdom delegation at the Imperial Conference on the eve of departure were having a friendly chat with the night clerk at the Ottawa Laurier at Ottawa. Incidentally he asked the clerk to tell him a good Canadian riddle to take home. So the night clerk said: "My mother and father have a child and I can't my brother and I can't my sister, who is it?"

"My word! What a face. I give it up. Who is it?"

"It's I."

In due course on arrival in England our visitor opening the joke or some friends as follows:

"My mother and father have a child and I can't my brother and I can't my sister. Who is it?"

"Give it up."

"I thought you would. I never would have guessed either. It's the jolly old night clerk at the hotel in Ottawa.—Civil Service Review."

Beware! Here Comes The "PIRAT" CAR

The annual drive by the British Post Office authorities against radio pirates, has begun and every part of Great Britain is being combed for unlicensed sets. This time, unlike last year, it is a lush-bush campaign carried out with greater intensity than ever, and with the utmost secrecy. Until a "pirate" hears a knock on his door and a voice saying, "Excuse me, I am from the General Post Office. It is estimated that there are 350,000 unlicensed sets in Greater Greater, and probably more than 2,000,000 all over the country. This picture shows the radio car crew at work detecting radio sets."

Scientist Says Earth's Magnetism Affects Body

Inconclusive Likely To Vainly If Head Is In North

Sleep with your head to the north and, under the soothing influence of the magnetic pole, the specter of insomnia is likely to be banished. This was the gist of advice given to readers of the Daily Mail of London, England, by Bernard Pusk when he drew his attention to recent studies of the effects of the earth's magnetism on the human body.

Some neurologists deliberately seek the north when they place their patients' beds in position. Observations have led to the discovery that there is a definite adverse effect on sensitive human beings when they sleep east-west, and thereby thwart the earth's magnetic currents.

Dr. F. Arvid, Professor of Psychology at the University of London, said that although no scientist would be prepared to state with certainty why less troubled sleep should result when the head lay to the north, there was ample foundation for the belief that the position of the bed had some effect.

Knowledge By Reading

Boys May Obtain Vast Store Of Information In Good Books

Most of the girls who have passed the high school entrance examination have read a few books that were not on the list of studies for that entry examination, but there are many boys able to pass that examination who have never read a book on their own account. This is a pity, for the boys who have read a book on their own account are encouraged to read. When William Pitt the younger, who was a boy, his father undertook the task. When the lad read a book, the Earl of Chatham, his father, would have him stand on a bench or table and repeat in his own words the tale he had read. Thus he acquired the habit of thoroughness in reading which gave him a vast store of knowledge from which to draw as well as a readiness of expression. Young Pitt became Prime Minister of the United Kingdom at twenty-three. Not one in many millions of boys would have an opportunity to become prime minister, no matter what their ability was, but there are opportunities of leadership open to every boy which Young Pitt's example shows how to use. Let him to every boy that he can induce to read, let of which a great deal of pleasure will accrue to the parent and a great deal of credit to the child. Try it this winter and prove it true.—Port Rowan News.

A Doctor's Explanation

Tells Why People Should Not Criticize Medical Profession

As a doctor, I cannot help but feel that a little, and I note to the magazines many more or less violent assaults on the inadequacy of the medical profession. It could be interesting to a layman to hear a suggestion from the other side.

There is, I fear, a shocking ignorance of the working of the institutions of medicine. You ask of us the impossible and get irritated when we cannot do it. You do not really never look about you. Don't they own parents and brothers who are sick and children who are sick? My own mother has been sick ever since I could remember, and I am 38. My father has high blood pressure. I myself suffer from migraine (sick headaches), and have had appendicitis, influenza, Measles, diphtheria and a few other things. Why don't I stand for all this nonsense? Why don't I sue out the medical profession? Because I know what are the boundaries of their knowledge, and I know that they are doing the best they can.

Food Selection

Says Chickens Are Best Authority On Food

Experimenters at the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph has shown that chickens and hens, if given a chance to make their own selection, choose those foods that will develop them into sound and healthy birds. Dr. G. I. Christie told the allied trades of the baking industry at Toronto. Stating that such tests could be extended to calves, Dr. Christie expressed the hope that they would some time be applied to children, because, he said, there is an inherent quality in all beings which will guide in the choice of foods.

Praise For Universities

Principal Of St. Andrew's, Scotland, Says Canada Should Follow

"Canada may be proud of the progress her institutions of higher learning have always recorded in every branch of the arts and sciences," Dr. James Irvine, principal and vice-chancellor of St. Andrew's University, Scotland, said when he arrived at Montreal on the Canadian Pacific liner "Duchess of Richmond" to address university faculties and students in Canada and the United States.

Custom Bred Hard Addressing the Canadian Club, says the Toronto Globe, Lord Halliwell occasionally referred to the "United Kingdom as 'England'."

It is probably so old English custom value is hard even in an Ulsterman, and while we in Canada, speaking strictly, do not agree with it, we are also concerned about the growing custom in England of calling one-quarter of the Western Hemisphere "America."

Wintering Of Bees

Best Methods Used For Housing During The Winter Months

One of the most important phases of Canadian beekeeping is the housing of the bees during the winter months and there are two methods in common use whereby the necessary protection is given. The first method is to move all the bees into a well-constructed cellar or dug-out and leave them there until the following spring. The second method is to pack them snugly in outside cases. Both methods are successful if properly carried out and both have been practiced on an extensive scale at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, and in a number of the branch farm stations in different parts of Canada with success. To be successful, outdoor wintering requires more care on the part of the beekeeper than does cellar wintering and success depends quite largely upon how the bees are packed away. Here at Ottawa different types and sizes of cases differing from one to four colonies are in use. Generally speaking, however, the type or shape of the case does not matter so long as it is built large enough to hold from one to four colonies and to allow at least four inches of packing material between the floor and the top of the case and from side to side and from top to bottom. No packing is required between the colonies. Secondly, the case should be built so as to have the packing material dry, and, thirdly, a separate entrance must be allowed for each colony. The entrance of the case will depend upon the number and size of the hives to go into it, but it is well to have it deep enough to allow for an full depth cover to be added to the hive. In order to make it weather-proof it should be made of well matched lumber and the roof covered with a waterproof material. The entrance to the case should be exactly opposite the entrances of the hives and should be about eight inches long and one-inch high. To reduce the size of the entrance for the coldest weather, it will be a revolving block so that when the block is lowered the entrance will be three-eighths of an inch by one inch high. There should be no ledge between the entrance and the block. The block should be sawed and planed. Remember protection is one of the factors of most wintering. Good cases do not make strong colonies or supply the necessary food, but good cases and good packing give the bees a better chance of living through.—Dominion Apelet.

Traffic Between U.S. And Canada

Statistics show 45,312,310 People Crossed Boundary During 1931. Total traffic of international bridge, ferry and tunnel companies during 1931 consisted of 7,297,883 motor vehicles, 213 horse-drawn vehicles, and 38,128,757 pedestrians and passengers, exclusive of drivers of vehicles. This tally counts one round trip as two trips. Including drivers, the total number of persons crossing the border on ferries, bridges and through tunnels was 53,726,740. Other international crossings, according to the Canadian Government Bureau of Statistics report on tourist traffic, included: motorists crossing on highways, 8,837,474 persons; railway passengers exclusive of through passengers, 2,539,616 persons; boat passengers other than ferry, 508,500, a total of 11,585,590, which added to the 37,240,740 persons who crossed from Canada to the United States and vice versa, by bridge, ferry and tunnel, makes a grand total of 45,312,310. The highway motorist traffic is estimated, based on the Customs data on motor vehicles entered and exported, and the average number of persons per vehicle as computed from returns supplied by tourists.

The heaviest traffic was between Detroit, Michigan, and Windsor, Ontario, where two ferry companies operate across the Detroit River, in addition to one bridge and a tunnel for pedestrians and vehicles; a railway tunnel and three systems of railway ferries also cross at this point. The traffic on the bridges across the Niagara River at Fort Erie, Ontario, Niagara Falls and Queenston, Ontario, was also heavy.

The international boundary between Canada and the United States extends over 5,500 miles, of which 3,100 miles are land boundary and 2,400 miles are water boundary. The land boundary is marked by 6,480 monuments and a vista cut through the forest covered areas; the water boundary is identified by 2,530 reference marks. This boundary comes under the jurisdiction and administration of the International Boundary Commission, comprising two Commissioners, one representing Canada and one the United States. They are guided in their work by the terms laid down in five international treaties. This long length of boundary line constitutes what is probably the longest undefended boundary line in the world, for no armament or armed forces are maintained by either country at any point along the 5,500 miles.

Massachusetts Store Makes Unusual Offer
Freedom To Buy Sheets From Customers At Advance Price. Confidence in its conviction that there was an unmistakable upward trend in the cotton and cloth markets led a Lynn, Mass., department store to offer to rebuy all unused sheets bought during an August sale at any time from October 1 to November 2, at 10 cents each above prices paid during the sale, and through the means of promotional advertising inserted in the Lynn Item and the Two-Grand-News convinced customers that "the time to buy cotton goods is now."

The Magrane department store began its advertising for the sale early in August with a big headline, "The Time to Buy Cotton Goods Is Now. It's Now the Past of Prudence to Anticipate Your Future Needs." This headline was repeated when it made the offer to rebuy unused sheets. Larger space was used later emphasizing this message, using eight columns for the headline.

J. P. O'Keefe, superintendent of the store, stated that it was the intention of the store executives by making this offer, to carry assurance in customers of an advance in cotton. Following the initial three days' sale it was necessary to recall advertisements on vacation. The cotton supplies were replenished and the sale continued a second week.

New Discovery By Montreal Doctor

Method May Help Greatly in Diagnosis of Liver Trouble

Methods of diagnosing diagnosed conditions of the liver and spleen may be revolutionized by the discovery of Dr. Rudolph Gottlieb, research assistant of McGill University. Dr. Gottlieb has established the feasibility of using thorium to render these organs visible on X-ray plates. Until now the use of thorium for X-ray examination of the liver and spleen has not been encouraged for fear of poisoning the patient. The McGill scientist found thorium could be absorbed into these organs with no ill results. As thorium is opaque to X-rays, the organ make themselves apparent on X-ray photographs. In addition, Dr. Gottlieb found that use of the substance enabled him to define visualization of the pulmonary circulation.

Cancer of the liver would make itself known because of the diseased cells would not absorb thorium and the affected area would be lighter on the plate.

According to the Journal of the Canadian Medical Association, in the current issue of which the discovery is made public, success of the method has been established in many tests on human beings. Dr. Gottlieb experimented with rats, and then used the process on himself. Later on the procedure was used in connection with 14 patients with excellent results.

A NEW HOUSE—

Within a new house promise lies;
Brave promise of a Paradise
Of work and peace and loved one's eyes.

Within a new house, all unfriended,
New dreams awake and softly glide
From window-sill to chimney-side.
Here tiny children laugh and sing,
And all day long their shrill notes ring.

As sweet as dawn, as fresh as spring,
Here plans and hopes go marching
Through the house for happy hearts to do
Within a little house, all new!

Ah, to be brave and gay again!
To hear once more the summer rain
On bright new roof and window-pane!
And yet, enough that such glad hours
Can leave in memory maddening powers
To blossom in a life, like flowers!

"Electric Eye" Used To Clock Speeders

Modern science has added a new thrill to motorizing, the invention of an invisible speed trap, operated by an "electric eye" which grimly and silently records the speed of passing cars when there isn't a motorcycle cop for miles around.

The intriguing little gimmick is already operating, secretly, on an unidentified stretch of the Boston Post Road, leading northeast from New York City, and is producing perfectly splendid results in the way of trapped motorists, according to Creston H. Caldwell, president of the New York Electrical Society, who revealed its existence at a meeting of the Electrical Association.

Two photocells are secreted in the roadway, Caldwell explained, and when a car passes over them in succession, bells ring in a distant police booth, indicating the elapsed time between points. If this measured interval is too brief, the policeman on duty further along the road orders the car to pull over and gives the driver a ticket regarding what speed he may be making when actually sighted.

At another town on the Connecticut Post Road great loudspeakers are now installed. Through these the local traffic officer can issue instructions to approaching cars a quarter of a mile away.
